Illustrating Some Points in a Girl's Choice of a Husband

By EMILY SEWELL.

Why is it that the most important step in life, marriage, is often decided at haphazard? Perhaps it is because every one considers marriage a lottery. At any rate, an impatient word, a flower given in the nick of time, a misunderstood sentence, a smile, will often determine whether Molly is to be Tom, who is a very nice fellow, or John with whiskey and final divorce.

Margaret Lee, though still young and comparatively inexperienced, was born to a natural insight into such matters. Where most young ladies would give their hearts in return for a compliment, she looked for something more enduring. She was wiser even than this. She knew that she could not depend on her fate would be with any man. Tom might be one of nature's noblemen, but he might also be a poor provider. John might be narrow-minded and vain, but might bestow upon her wealth and honors. Margaret realized that she must take her chances.

Her two choices gradually narrowed down to one of two men. Her Tom and John were Pope Armstrong and Le Baron Brown. Armstrong represented what has been said of Tom. He was especially interested in his own career. Brown was, in some respects, a typical young man of noble blood, but was regarded by his friends as full of vice impracticable impulses and a born gambler; not a gambler in the narrow, but in the broad sense. Both wanted Margaret, and Margaret wanted one or the other of them. Her judgment said Armstrong, her inclination Brown.

One evening Armstrong went to see her and had very excellent arguments why she should marry him. He was getting a good salary, with prospects of a better. He was putting aside 30 per cent of his income and already had a nest egg laid up that was paying him a good interest. "I am going for houses and lands," he said, "and you know that this is no vain boast, for I have already done the hardest part of the work. I have got the first thousand dollars."

Margaret's heart, if not her heart was won. She remembered that Brown had recently loaned a friend $500, that he never expected to see again. Would she not better settle the matter between them now, and in favor of Armstrong? She would if she could, but she could not.

"Come tomorrow evening," she said, "and I'll tell you my answer."

"I'll tell you, I'll tell you," Margaret said the next morning. "I'll tell you tomorrow evening and we'll flip a coin to decide whether you marry me or not."

"Very well," said Margaret, in a tired way.

The next day she met Brown on the street, and he walked home with her. He had no more to say to each other that they could not reach home, so Brown went in.

"Margaret," he said, "I have no doubt that you can do better by marrying some one else than me. But my argument is this: You must take the risk any way. Why not take it with a man you love? Besides, some men are capable of being made by a wife. You would undoubtedly have a hard time with me, but you're a level-headed girl, and that's the kind I need. I'm a donkey engine, and you know, an engine can't run itself; it must have an engineer."

Margaret was so influenced by this argument, especially when her heart was enlisted, that she promised the young man that if something—she wouldn't tell what—turned out to her earning a certain way she would marry him. Brown showed that when interested in a subject he had a lot of force in him, for he never gave up till he drew the coin from the pocket that she was to decide his rival's fate by the spinning of a coin. Then he refused to let go until she had agreed to give him an equal chance. She consented that he should be present the next evening and the coin should be cast between him and Armstrong. The coin would be spun as a bit of playfulness, but it was understood that whichever man won was to be married. The advantage was with Brown because he knew of the game to be played and had a day in which to prepare for it. One may say that to spin an affair there is no preparation to be made or if any is possible it is disadvantageous.

But while Armstrong had the advantage of a planet revolving in its fixed orbit, Brown was a man for occasion. While he had noble impulses, he did not allow them to run away with him in the matter of the girl he loved. He was in war and long to a people of nature. During the evening he spun coins on a smooth table top till midnight. Before he had finished he discovered how to make them fall on which ever side he chose.

The next morning he telephoned to his employer that he would not be ready for business that day and had no excuse to offer for his absence. "Very sorry to lose you, Mr. Brown," was the reply, "but you'll be here tomorrow; your place will be filled."

It may seem singular that a man struggling to get a wife should give up his income, on which he could not get Brown argued that he could not get the wife and keep the position. He possessed the faculty of deciding between the greatest evil and the least. He needed all of the day to continue his preparations for the game he was to play in the evening. If he lost there was no recovery, if he must have a lifetime in which to secure another position.

When the evening for the trial came Brown took up his preparations. Every moment since he had been with Margaret the day before, except eight hours for sleep. It was not that he dreaded failure, but he was being caught introducing loaded coins for the spinning he could not tell just how good would be the result. He might lose the girl, he certainly would incur the contumely of his rival, and his action might prove ruinous to him. But Armstrong troubled him except the possible loss of the prize.

Brown called late enough to give his rival an opportunity to get in before the trial entered an interval. He merely dropped in casually. Armstrong looked annoyed, and Margaret appeared to be very regretful of having taken the trouble to go to the trial. The three with difficulty kept up an embarrassing conversation for half an hour, when Armstrong, giving Margaret a knowing look, proposed he decide a question he had raised by spinning a coin. He had invited her to go to the theater with him, and she seemed to be in doubt what day to set for the purpose. His proposition he intended for an introduction to the trial that was to decide his fate with Margaret. The night for attending the theater having been settled, Brown proposed some other way of amusing the trial by coin spinning. They were an American Society now in his hair, and at last Brown proposed to Armstrong to spin a coin for it. Margaret tried to make a making was the rose. Then Brown spoke.

"Mr. Armstrong, there is a prize we both desire, though I can't say that either will possess it. I shall not name it. You are perfectly aware of what it is. I will spin a silver half dollar, and the best three out of five will have it."

Armstrong looked at Brown and understood. Then he looked at Margaret and saw that, while she did not approve, she did not forbid. They began playing with a coin that Armstrong had taken from his pocket. Brown picked it up and said, "We will begin with this half dollar; spin it twice; I will then furnish one which we will spin twice; then we will spin three times, and then we will spin three times, and then we will spin three times."

Placing the coin under his forefinger, he asked Armstrong, "Heads or tails?" Armstrong chose heads, the coin was spun, and it came up heads.

Armstrong chose heads, the coin was spun, and it came up heads.

"Let us try it again," said Brown. "And see if tails will always be up. Heads up, and contrary to expectation, heads was always up. Brown then showed him that the coin had been fixed on the tail side. He had changed coins, without his rival knowing it."

Armstrong arose and, concealing his chagrin as well as he could, bowed politely to both of those he left behind and withdrew.

The moment Margaret was left alone with the man who had won she threw herself into his arms.

"You could not have told me," she exclaimed impulsively.

"No," he said, "I couldn't."

"But you intended to do it?"

"Yes, I did. It seemed that I couldn't take any risk in this matter. I spent a whole day in making preparations to win and gave up my position to gain time for the purpose. So you see you are to be possessed by a man who is—"

"Never mind. I am possessed by the man I want."

Brown became a successful and distinguished man, with whom his wife was very happy.

"But he always said she was his engine."

Ancient Lineage.

Lord Palmerston was one day riding through the New Forest when he saw a laboring man bearing a load.

"What is your name, my man?" he asked.

"Curlew," was the answer. "I thought as much as I could of the name."

He asked if he were descended from the line burner of that name who carried the name of William Rufus after he had been slain by Tyrrell's arrow.

The man said he was not, but Lord Palmerston, snaking hands on his long walking stick, said he was the son of the oldest curlew in England.

MIGHTY ARCTURUS.

If This Star Were Our Sun It Would Instantly Consume the Earth.

The parallax of a star is its angular displacement as seen from two opposite points on the earth's orbit. The base line employed in this gigantic piece of surveying is 186,000,000 miles in length, but the calculation is reduced to the semidiameter of the orbit. The results are at the same time amazing.

Let us take the famous star Arcturus, often called the "star of Job" because in the Old Testament the Almighty is represented as saying to the unfortunate patriarch, who maintains a certain dignity in spite of his helplessness and his sufferings, "Canst thou cut forth Arcturus and his sons?"

Many conflicting measures of the parallax of Arcturus have been made, but the latest made at Yale seem more probably correct than their predecessors. They fix the parallax at 0.008 seconds—i. e., sixty-six one-hundredths of a second. From this it is easy to calculate the distance of the star. It comes out at nearly 200,000,000 miles (two hundred and ninety million miles). This is more than 3,000,000 times the distance of the earth from the sun.

Having the distance we can calculate the actual amount of light shed by Arcturus, or, in other words, its actual brightness as compared with that of our sun, on the supposition that both were at the same distance from us. We thus find that Arcturus exceeds our sun as a light giver about 2,500 times. It is a sun 2,500 times brighter than ours.

Put the earth as near to Arcturus as it is now, and all life would disappear from its surface as it sweeps off by a blast of inconceivable heat. The summer temperature would rise to tens of thousands of degrees. The oceans would boil away. Vegetation would be burned up in a twinkling.

Years of living beings would char in their scorched. The plains and mountains would burst into flame. Minerals would run in molten streams. There would be no rest except for a few living world nearer to Arcturus than about 4,000,000,000 miles. If he has planets he must keep them at a respectful distance. And yet nearly 300,000,000,000 miles from him we can look into his blazing eye and see the sun.

Still, Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace maintains that this little star, this tiny attendant of a tiny sun, is the most intelligent of all stars, and the only intelligent of disembodied spirits—that the universe contains, and Dr. Wallace is a learned man. But his learning is not that which answers any others.—Garrett P. Service in New York American.

Unavoidable Delay.

"Your honor, may I have a warrant for the arrest of my husband? He boxed my ears yesterday."

"How many years have you to live?"

"I fetch the warrant in about a month."

"In a month? Why won't you take it at once?"

"Heard your honor, when my husband slapped my face I took my riding pin and hit him on the head so he was obliged to be removed to the hospital. The doctors say, however, that he will be on his legs again in a month."

Discrediting an Astrologer.

A certain king, says a tale from the Persian, asked an astrologer, "How many years will I live?"

The wise man replied, "Ten." The king became very despondent and betook himself, as one stricken with a sickness, to his bed. His vizier, who possessed great wisdom, sent for the seer and in the king's presence asked him, "How many years have you to live?"

He replied, "Ten." The vizier ordered that he should that year be executed in the king's presence. The king, however, was so much impressed by the sagacity of his minister and no longer attached any importance to the astrologer's saying.

Getting Into German.

In the use of legal terms the German has a saying of a saving of number of words over our equivalent expressions seems to be lost in multiplication of syllables in the words used by him. For example, he says "Zurückhaltungsrecht" for "right of lien" and "Gesamtschuldnerhaftigkeit" for "liability of common property." What a fearful word he must have as an equivalent for our "irreparability"—Doest.

Rung in an Actor.

"How did you enjoy the vaudeville performance?"

"I was delighted. They had performing cats, a basketball player, a champion pugilist, a trained cockatoo, and I give you my word, they even had an actor doing a turn."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Hot Water as a Tonic.

Drinking a cup of hot water is a more efficacious treatment for many ailments than persons realize. There are physicians who prescribe it for inactive livers, a glassful to be taken as soon as one wakes in the morning. The warmth as well as the liquid are beneficial, for it is a well known fact that few persons drink as much water through the day as they should.

That the dose effects the complexion favorably there is no doubt. Some persons add the juice of half a lemon to the water. There is no doubt that for certain systems this is beneficial, but it is a matter that a physician should decide in individual instances.

Many a case of simple indigestion may be cured by drinking a cup of hot water, the dose to be taken as soon as one wakes in the morning. Adding a half teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda is recommended by some physicians where there is no acid in the stomach, the soda acting as a neutralizer, while the warm liquid carries the matter from the stomach.

Persons who are dieting for reduction find hot water more quick than cold, and they therefore can get along with less food and less quantity. That water taken with food is fattening there is no doubt.

Hot water is an excellent substitute for tea and coffee, and it is a beverage and on certain occasions may be used as a food substitute.

If for any reason there is a desire to get along with the least quantity of food and the stomach becomes empty, hot water is soothing and fills the void, thus giving the system a feeling of fullness.

It is in no way a food, however, and should not be regarded as such.

Changing the Hair Line.

So much has been said of the folly of changing the coiffure to suit each passing style that the latter side is apt to be overlooked. Their can be worn too continuously if one style, and if a woman is not careful she may find the angles at which the long hair is arranged, and there should be frequent changes, if only in the privacy of the boudoir.

The benefit of these changes is realized when one finds that dandruff accumulates under the thickest part of the hair, and it is too long in one place to change the fringe of the trouble becoming chronic.

Noting it have much to be responsible for by not regarding their straits for their daughters. No girl should occasionally take weeks off for a pompadour unless she wears a broad path across her cranium. This holds good among society women. One of those physicians says women who have any little defect that can be hidden by powder or paint should never hesitate to employ the artificial method. "Appearances," he explains, "mean much to a woman mentally and socially. A girl who has some slight personal defect, such as a crooked nose, a crooked or bloodless lips, is enormously handicapped. The knowledge of her defect and the thought others may observe it feed her vanity and lead to self-contidence. She shuns society and becomes morose and miserable. I know of one case where a girl's life was ruined because of a crooked nose. So long as a woman's makeup is not so obvious as to be objectionable her nose to an end are just lines. She does not see any harm and she is not herself a great deal of good. The knowledge that her personal defect is no longer a source of trouble gives her contented mind and that has its inevitable result upon her character and outlook on life."

A Suggestive Title.

Here's a wonder what the meaning of that ponderous and awkward sentence is in a reader's attitude.

Shu—Oh, don't you see? He has just said, "I am a merry bird, and she is a merry bird."

What does the artist call the picture?

Eczema 25 Years Cured by "Cuticura"

Leg Like Raw Flesh from Kneec Down

"I have been treated by doctors for twenty-five years for a bad case of eczema on my leg. They did their best, but failed to cure it. My own doctor had advised me to have my leg cut off, but I said I would try the Cuticura Remedies myself. I tried them if you like but I do not think they will do any good. At this time my leg was worse than ever. I had a piece of raw flesh from knee down to ankle. I had to walk on crutches.

"I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent. After the first two treatments the swelling went down and in two months the leg was cured and the new skin grown on. The doctor could not believe his own eyes when he saw that Cuticura had cured my leg. I have lost my leg. I am truly grateful for the wonderful cure that Cuticura brought and I always recommend it most highly as a sure and economical cure for skin diseases." (Signed) Miss J. B. Benson, 277 Main St., Montreal.

Improved Cars for Shipping Horses
The fifty new horse cars which were recently put into operation by the Canadian Pacific Railway have become very popular with shippers of horses. The other day at the Woodbine races in Toronto an owner of a big Southern stable wanted to buy one of the cars outright from the Canadian Pacific. In moving about from track to track his horses had to cover a large amount of railway mileage and he thought that the C. P. R. cars were the safest and best in which to ship them.

The cars are built with adaptable stalls and collapsible feed troughs and are an improvement on the ordinary cars used for shipping horses.

A thorough Pill-to clear the stomach and bowels of impurities and irritants is necessary when their action is irregular. The pills that will do this work thoroughly are Farmer's Vegetable Pills, which are mild in action but mighty in result. They purge painlessly and effectively, and work a permanent cure. They can be used without fear by the most delicately constituted, as there are no painful effects preceding their gentle operation.

When it is said of a man that he is in advance of the world, it is usually the case that he is wasting time advocating doctrines that won't work. If you are abreast of the world's progress, you are doing well.

It may sound like a paradox, but common politeness between husband and wife is the most uncommon thing we know of.

Warts are unsightly blemishes and corns are painful growths. Holloway's Corn Cure will remove them.

Queries and Answers
"William, do you know why you are like a donkey?"

"Like a donkey?" echoed William opening his eyes wide. "No, I don't."

"Do you give it up?"

"I do."

"Because your better-half is stubborn herself!"

"That's not bad. Ha! ha! I'll give up to my wife when I get home."

"Finally," he began, when he sat down to supper, "do you know why I am like a donkey?"

He waited a moment, expecting his wife to give it up; but she didn't. She looked at him with some pity in her eyes and replied:

"I suppose, dear, because you were born so."

Engaging
Mr. Honeymoon looked hopefully at the pleasant, easy-faced Norwegian girl with whom the manager of the employment bureau had accorded him an interview.

"Can you wash and iron?" he asked.

"Yes, I do so," responded the cheerful Norwegian.

"And can you wait on table? I mean will you, and answer the door?"

"Mr. Honeymoon faltered. My wife is quite determined on those points."

"Yes, I do so," and Minna continued to beam benevolently.

"And you can cook, of course," said Mr. Honeymoon.

"Yes," said Minna, for the third time. "I do not find, when you keep me busy, so I don't help me."

HAD BAD SORE FOUR YEARS
Zam-Buk Has Healed It!

Mrs. Wilson, 110 Wickson Ave., Toronto, says: "About four years ago a sore spot appeared on the right side of my face. This spot increased in size until it became about a half an inch in diameter and very painful. I went to a doctor but the ointment he gave me did not have any good effect. The sore continued to discharge freely, was most painful. I had it cauterized, tried polities and all kinds of salves, but it was no good, and I continued to suffer from it for four years."

A sample of Zam-Buk was one day given to me, and I used it. Although the quantity was so small it seemed to do me some good, so I purchased further supply.

"Each box did me more and more good, and, to my delight, before I had been using Zam-Buk three weeks I saw that it was going to heal the sore. In less than a month it was healed."

"I know a lady in the east of the city, whose husband suffered for years with an open sore on his leg. On my recommendation Zam-Buk was tried in that case. The other day, when I saw her, she told me that it had healed the sore completely."

Such is the opinion of all persons who have tried Zam-Buk. It is a sure cure for eczema, piles, abscesses, ulcers, scalp sores, ringworm, cuts, burns, scalds, bruises, and all skin injuries and diseases. 50c. box, all druggists and stores, or sent free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. In case of skin disease use also Zam-Buk Soap, 25c. tablet.

The Power of the Breath.
When you have breathed into a paper bag in order to induce it, for the fun of putting it afterward with your feet, have you ever asked yourself what is the power of your lungs? You are aware that this force is capable of being measured by the instrument called the spirometer, which you will often see at fairs. You may replace this elaborate affair with a simple paper bag.

Let your bag be long and rather narrow, of a multiplicity strong fabric. Lay it flat on the edge of the table, its mouth toward you; charge it with gradually increasing weight, such as books; then begin to blow, and you will be fairly astonished at the volume of your breath is able to inflate. As soon as you have become expert you will find it quite easy to inflate a couple of heavy books, one above the other, by blowing underneath them. Magnificent experiments.

The Local Option Campaign which has been going on in the towns to the north of us has been called off, it having been found that the election act covering this measure is not workable in an entire license district, and consequently the campaign has been called off until an act of Parliament has been passed that will amend the present act. This question will likely be resumed again in the spring.

What The Unions Are Doing

The executive of the Alberta Local Improvement District Association met at Edmonton on Oct. 9th, and made all arrangements for the next annual convention of that body which will be held at Calgary on November 28th and 29th next. As there are now nearly 250 Districts in Alberta it is expected that there will be a large attendance at the convention, especially as several matters of importance will be up for discussion. Among other matters which have been placed on the programme are addresses by Hon. A. L. Sifton, who it is hoped will explain the proposed new Rural Municipalities Act; John Stocks on practical road making; and J. Perrie on the general accounting work of the district. Besides this the executive have prepared several resolutions of importance for consideration, among them being notice of motion changing the time of the annual convention from November to March; recommending the adoption of the land value system of taxation for the proposed rural municipalities; the election of councillors from the districts at large in preference to the present system of electing from divisions; the changing of the system of taxation on all rural lands so that land values only can be taxed; the necessity of compelling railway companies to provide proper and efficient cattle guards; the need of an efficient drainage act, and several other matters of importance. The above is sufficient to show that the convention will be a profitable one and that the proceedings will be well worth following.—Grain Growers' Guide.
